COURSE DESCRIPTION:

The world’s religious traditions variously contemplate the perennial human question: what happens after we die? Do we experience heaven? Hell? Reincarnation? Judgement? Purgatory? Liberation? Oblivion? How do the world’s religious traditions in fact go about deliberating on this important question? Indeed, why do they do so at all? In what is the certainly of their truth-claims surrounding death grounded? How do these deliberations about death factor into the sort of life they prescribe for religious adherents? Are the beliefs of a given religion compatible with those of another? This course explores religious perspectives on death and the afterlife, as conceptualized cross-culturally. We look to the death and afterlife beliefs specifically of Hinduism, Buddhism, Judaism, Christianity and Islam. We will situate the material in historical and sociocultural context, drawing on the beliefs, texts, rituals, values implicated from circumstance to circumstance across time. We will also adopt a comparative approach to discern both patterns across these religious perspectives, and also highlight particularities.
proper to each, e.g. Jewish mourning practices versus Hindu cremation practices. Moreover, how does contemplation of the meaning and nature of death factor into a secular culture? What do we make of secular funerals? And what about the paranormal and its relationship to death, e.g. near-death experiences? Mediumship? Hauntings and apparitions? Past-life memories? In learning about the deliberations on death across the ages, we confront a quandary innate to the human experience, no less so in modern times.
